Excerpt: . CHAPTER XXXIV CONCLUSION THE SOCIOLOGIC ASPECTS OP DENTAL DISEASE The authors feel that this study of periodontic infections should not be brought to a conclusion without some consideration of the sociological importance of these disease conditions. The development of dentistry has taken place with a constant emphasis on the repair of damage already done. The trend of modern conditions of living has increased the demand for reparative work to an extent which has made it well nigh impossible for the dentist to keep ahead of the immediate needs of his patients, to say nothing of giving sufficient attention to the field of prophylaxis. Moreover this effort to retain the teeth has unwittingly led him into methods of practice which have undermined to a degree the health of the individuals so served. The influence of dental disease and oral sepsis on the public health...
