Excerpt: . . . they actually build new cars in the shops which Van Vorst opened when he came with the General Electric Company in 1913. He likes electric locomotives, says they are healthy and clean and safe. He takes pride in looking over all of the 21 locomotives, oiling them, tuning them up and having them ready every morning for immediate service. His days of steam railroading made him appreciate the convenience of the electric type; for in the old days the firemen and engineers had to spend an hour to an hour and a half in the morning getting the steam locomotives ready for work. Van Vorst also knows the details of railroading life, because for 13 years, working 12 hours a night, he was freight brakeman, switch tender and yard brakeman on the N. Y. C. ; later being promoted to yard conductor, then yardmaster...
